Abstract

The Multimedia Systems Department is a fast growing department which aims to provide extensive and varied undergraduate courses that develop skills in multimedia computing and provide in-depth knowledge in current multimedia technologies.

All courses offered are based on current technologies used in multimedia industries and they aim to provide a direct route to first class multimedia computing institutions.

Members of this department are actively engaged in leading-edge research in different areas such as computer graphics and applications, video compression, multimedia information retrieval, image processing, pattern recognition, and some areas of multimedia fundamental technologies.

The department offers the Bachelor of Science degree in Multimedia Systems.
