Abstract

It occurs that a person may build or grow constructions by his materials on a land belongs to another person on alleged justifiable ground. The notion of this alleged justifiable ground is embodied in, a concept that the person (the causer) believes that he is entitled to builds or grows. Such a principle, i.e (the alleged justifiable ground) shows the dilemma whether, the principle of good faith (bona fides) or, a principle of valid ground (byvirtue of agood title), imparts legitimacy and legality on construction and growing on the land belongs to a third person.

It set clear that this notion of (the alleged justifiable ground) is an innovated one, and it is cited from the majallat, and it is not connected to or
