Abstract

This study focused on talking about the effects left by the Russian-Ukrainian conflict as a force majeure that cast a shadow over the world for a short period and affected the global and European economy and commercial contracts between the conflicting parties and the impact of the American and European intervention on this conflict and the impact that the world still feels on the European and global economies.

The study examined the definition of international contracts, their types and distinctive characteristics, in addition to talking about force majeure and its advantages that make it an influential circumstance on international commercial contracts So that it includes the state of international armed conflict, as the case of the Russian-Ukrainian conflict showed the necessity of this.

These results were met by many recommendations, the most important of which is the need for global intervention to resolve the conflict peacefully, stopping bloodshed in both conflicting countries.

Keywords: Russian-Ukrainian conflict, international armed conflict, international trade contracts, force majeure, US intervention in Russia.
